McNally Homes

The McNallys have been in the construction business for five generations. It began in 1850, when Gene McNally's great-grandfather started McNally Construction in England. Eventually, the family moved to Massachusetts and set up their company in Fall River. In April 1991, the McNallys moved to Florida and established McNally Homes.

Gene McNally and E.J. McNally are the current generation of father and son, respectively, steering the helm of McNally Homes. Gene heads the estimating team, and E.J. oversees onsite construction and meets with new clients. In fact, a member of the McNally family personally directs and supervises every phase of construction—from the initial custom design to the final trim work.

McNally Homes handles both design and construction. "The design and construction functions are joined together," E.J. explains. "This enables the homeowner to become a partner in the building process. The homeowners enjoy greater continuity of service, which can result in a tremendous savings of time and money."

The pride and integrity the McNallys invest in each home they build is reflected in the family's motto, displayed on the McNally coat of arms: "Our word is our bond." McNally's award-winning homes have been highly praised in numerous national magazines, along with a featured segment on television's This Old House. The company has built homes in Celebration, Keene's Point, Winter Park and other prestigious neighborhoods.

Gene and E.J. believe that the key to their success is the fact that they are family. Construction expertise is part of their genetic makeup, the men say with a laugh. The father and son relate to each other effortlessly on both business and personal levels, leaving plenty of energy to actually do the work they love—building magnificent custom homes.
